Excellent News of Industry and Goodness in the Year 1610

In January the Duke of Devonshire, who was then Lord Treasurer, did send a great number of his servants to the West Indies, to see what might be done there, and what might be brought home. They found that the Indians were very industrious, and that they had a great many good things, which they brought home, and sold for a great price. The Duke was very pleased with this, and he sent more servants to the West Indies, to see what might be done there, and what might be brought home. They found that the Indians were very industrious, and that they had a great many good things, which they brought home, and sold for a great price. Sow early, being and late, sowing time, let the Duke of Devonshire, who was then Lord Treasurer, do as he thinks fit. He should send a great number of his servants to the West Indies, to see what might be done there, and what might be brought home. They found that the Indians were very industrious, and that they had a great many good things, which they brought home, and sold for a great price.
